HOT FUDGE

In 1918, Lagomarcino's candy shop had already found success selling hand-made candies. Angelo and Luigia had ordered new lamps, custom-made booths and a soda fountain bar, and a new terrazzo floor installed. With these expenses, the Lagomarcino's were watching every penny.

Shortly after, a peddler entered the store selling hard candy and recipes. He took Angelo aside and told him he would sell him, and only him, a recipe for the perfect hot fudge. Angelo accepted the offer, and for 25 dollars he owned the recipe. Luigia was furious with him for spending so much money. Luckily for Angelo, the fudge was extremely popular, and we still use the same recipe today.
